

I've been a Quixtar IBO for over four years now. My wife and I are silver producers and will qualify as gold producers this month. The past four years have been very exciting and very rewarding. We're currently in the process of replacing my wife's income and bringing her home within the next 12 months. This business is not only good for creating a substantial income, but provides a great opportunity for everyone to grow. The people we associate with are simply some of the best I've ever met. Honesty is one of the biggest assets of the people involved in this business. When I got started in this business, as a student, I was clearly told that achieving success is a process and should not be a get rich quick scheme. It sounded too good to me, because I spent a little over $300 to get started and I could get most of it back if I chose not to pursue it. Today, we pass the same information on to new people and we continue to maintain the same high standards of integrity and honesty.

The proposed rule requires a seven day waiting period. Honestly, if this rule was in effect when I the plan was shared with me, I would not be involved in this business. Why? Simply because it takes work to get people involved with the business? A seven day waiting period would make it extremely difficult (especially with a full time job.) The Quixtar opportunity has an incredible six month money back policy. So if after getting started someone chooses not to build the business, they can opt out. This gives people enough time to be involved with the people and the environment to decide whether or not this is a business for them. During sign-up we make all this information available to the prospective IBO.

This business is a level playing field for everyone. The requirement of 10 references does not make this an equal opportunity for everyone anymore. When I moved from New Jersey to Philadelphia, PA, I hardly knew anyone in the area. It would have been extremely difficult for me to provide a list of references to my prospects. Our team meets at least twice every week to provide information to prospects. This is a great way for prospects to meet other IBOs having a similar background.

In today's day and age, it is extremely easy for people to obtain information. If someone would have provided me with a list of litigations when I got started, I probably would have not been involved with the business. I'm glad that was not the case. Think of it this way, when a new person applies for a job in a company, do they provide a list of litigations? If not, why should Quixtar IBOs be forced to do so?

When we share the business plan with prospects, we make it very clear that it is a model and that the income could vary. We also provide prospects with a literature pack which includes information about the corporation, the 6-4-2 marketing plan, and a list of few products and business partners. The information provided clearly specifies the average income of 'active' IBOs. Sharing financial documents with prospects is not a good idea. Reason being there could be someone who did nothing for a long period of time and obviously made no money. When this person decides to start building the business, it would be extremely difficult for them to pass on any belief to the prospect.

The world continues to live on hope. This business is the purest and the most incredible opportunity for anyone out there. A rule like this could completely crush the hopes of millions of people in this already suffering economy.
